tained as long as two of our leading houses were laying in stock but since their demands have been satisfied the price has fallen.

Adelaide wheat is now over 4s. It is therefore impossible to conceive of any safer investment. Without exaggeration, there is

[illegible]

cargo of coal from Newcastle to Bombay, and the ship was ordered to proceed to the place where the Dutch ship phoenix Maria takes up from Guichen Bay to Port Walker, on the north-west coast of this continent, on terms kept private. L advice from India and China being more favourable as to hom-ward freights than for some considerable time previous, several orders were made, but without leading to transactions. No charters have been effected during the month to load at either of the Indian ports, to return to this or to French ports. The phoenix left Sydney with a full cargo at £12 per head landed alive; and the British ship Maxwell, for same port, gets a lump sum £1300 for horses and cargo, ship finding water, and for some employment another ship is now wanted. Our coasting trade continues depressed, and not more than 140 can be procured for coals from Newcastle to Hobson's Bay. There is still but little employment for sailing vessels to the New Zealand ports, the bulk of the trade being confined to the steamer trade. Steamships South Australian, 633 tons register, built at Kinghorn, in Scotland in 1864, classed a over 1, has changed hands at £11,500.

Disengaged tonnage in port is very limited.

DR. MANNING ON RELIGIOUS UNION.

(From the Times, January 19.)

DR. MANNING's pleasant speech at Birmingham deserves a cordial recognition. He deserves our thanks, in the first place, for the generosity with which he has recognised the efforts now made in quarters to treat the Roman Catholic religion with perfect equity and consideration. Catholic Emancipation fixed upon our Statute-book the principle of perfect toleration towards Roman Catholics, and Dr Manning acknowledges that the reign of her presence Majesty has witnessed the increasing application of this principle in both the public and private life of Englishmen. That it is not yet completely carried out must indeed be admitted. He represents in particular that Roman Catholic children in workhouses ought to be handed over to the Roman Catholic schools. No doubt, also, in many instances, the Prison

Ministers Act is not yet acted upon in the spirit with which it was passed by the Legislature, and that amusing examples for our imitation which Dr. Marjolin has drawn from Ireland are not inopportune. It seems that in the Sister Island Boards of Catholic magistrates appoint Protestant chaplains to gaols and workhouses, and pay them fair salaries, even when there are no Protestants under their charge. Be whatever secondary motives it may be suggested such an example is a good one, and may be fairly recommended to the imitation of our own guardians and justices. From a Parliamentary Return of last session Dr. Manning concludes that out of about thirty-five prisons to which the Prison Ministers Act is applicable, in at least twenty-five it has not yet been carried into effect. This is certainly a discreditable result, and Dr. Manning animadverts upon it with forbearance. He was quite aware, he tells us, that the delinquent Justices have not acted "with an intention of depriving either the poor Catholic prisoner or the poor Catholic pauper of his religion. He believes the omission to be the effect of "old passive habit, old immobility, old stagnation;" and "excepting exceptions," he "does not believe that what he must call the maledministration of the statute law respecting poor-houses and prisons has been the deliberate result of an intention to be unjust." W are sure that Dr. Manning does his fellow-countrymen no more than justice, but it is not every one who is capable of doing justice to his opponents, still less of doing it with so much frankness. It is, however, by acting in this spirit that Dr. Manning will most readily accomplish his object. The lingering suspicion which still obstructs the intentions of the Legislature would only be hardened by angry denunciations, but they will be disarmed by courtesy and trust; he gradually dissipated by a display of fairness and moderation on the part of the Roman Catholic authorities.

golden age of the Church. Its opposite is "the state of conflict, controversy, religious strife, theological bitterness." The plagues of Egypt are the types of such a state. He does not know whether to call it the iron or the brazen age. Now, however, that we have once fallen, it is impossible, he fears, to recover the age of gold. "Religious unity has passed—men have forfeited it." But he earnestly desires that the revival of the golden age should be the result of the present crisis.

may, and that "we may at least enter upon that silver period, less perfect than the first, in which, though we are not united in one faith, we may be united in kindness, mutual consideration, justice one with another, and equity to those who differ from us." We are disposed to think that the Archbishop's allusion is more happy than he intended, and that his golden age of perfect religious unity corresponds to the golden age of human unity.

bi-antiquity in a characteristic which was hardly in his mind. It is probably a mere dream of the imagination, and never had the slightest existence in fact. It certainly did not exist in the early Church; and if the Middle Ages presented more outward appearance of unity, it can be only to a superficial observer. Dr. Manning's golden age is, perhaps, happily illustrated by the example which he adduces from modern times. If, he says, "there could be one faith, one heart, one mind, one worship, one altar, round which the whole population is gathered, as I see it in Ireland, with very little to disturb it, such would be the happiest condition of a people." This presents us with quite a new model of Christian unity, and one which, perhaps, is too easily attainable. It is probable that there have been several occasions in the world's history in which as much harmony has been attained as exists in Ireland at the present day. If unity is "very little" disturbed by furious factions, occasional murder and constant broken heads, the golden age is not so imaginary as is commonly supposed. In truth, this supposed unity never existed, nor in the present constitution of human nature can it be seriously desired. Truth in its integrity is too good for the human vision. So long as men live they will

But, if a golden age of unity be not only impossible but undesirable, there appears still greater force in Dr. Manning's exhortations to the silver alter native. Since we must differ, we have the more reason to differ charitably. If we must be antagonists, let us at least conduct our warfare fairly.

and not attempt to sway the issue by violence or by undue influences. The only object of preachers of religion must be to convince the conscience, and this is not to be accomplished by penal laws or temporal bribes. On the contrary, to force conscience is to loosen the true hold of religion, and teaches men, not to change their religion, but to regard all religion with dislike. Such is the principle on which Burke used the words quoted by Dr.

Manning, and urged that the Roman Catholic religion ought to be treated with the utmost respect in Ireland. Dr. Manning seems, indeed, to be inclined to pursue this argument a little too far. Because we are not to use unfair weapons in controversy it does not follow that we are to abstain from controversy altogether; and he asks rather too much if he expects Protestants to abstain from all proselytism whatever in Ireland. He has, indeed, just reason to complain of the course pursued pursued by some Protestant missionaries, and no repro-bation can be too strong for a system which takes advantage of the poverty of parents to pervert their children or buys a few shreds of Protestantism by a distribution of leaves. But Dr. Manning is scarcely the person to protest against proselytism in general. He has himself proclaimed his desire to convert the whole England to Roman Catholicism, and has compared his mission to that of the first apostles of Christianity.

the Roman Empire. We are all heretics, and his object is to proselytise us to the true faith. By a
